

Providing structure in an unstructured world

History

Ascertus was founded in 2000 by Roy Russell. Before setting up Ascertus, Roy was the Founder and Technical Director of Quintec International Limited, a specialist in migrating users off Wang Systems and onto PC networks. He also qualified as one of the first Certified Novell NetWare Engineers (CNE) in the UK.

As early as 1992, Roy realised that the clients he served really needed a system that provided “document management” for their PC networks as there was little or no control over where to save documents, what to call them and very frustratingly - how to find them.

Following the sale of Quintec and a few years in Washington DC where he led and project managed a case management, document management and records management system implementation for the US Department of Justice, Roy returned to the UK and set up Ascertus in 2000.

His vision was to provide technology consultancy to corporate legal departments. At the time there was no other company in the Europe providing such a service, helping to educate in-house counsel as to the solutions available to them to improve productivity, increase efficiencies and mitigate the risks they faced daily.
